ARTHUR SALE LETTERS

SELECTED AND EDITED BY ROBERT RICKARD AND RICHARD VERITY

“However early the postman, a letter from Arthur was not suitable for breakfast. His prose packing the punch of a double distilled dose of Ulysses (but happily stopping well short of Finnegans Wake), was both a challenge and a pleasure that had to be set aside for unhurried contemplation. Gossip, reflections on world affairs or the marvels of science, messages from Nell, literary criticism and indignation, Magdalene and family news, mild dismay – and often not so mild – at the quality of one’s latest attempt at writing, remembrance of shared things past, practical arrangements for the next meeting, all these would mingle in a sparkling blend of word play, allusion, pun, digression and paradox. It was a joy to receive them. And it is a joy now to receive everyone else’s as well.”
